CALL FOR PAPERS

Event details:

Leadership and Innovation for a Sustainable World

July 19 – 22, 2015

Catholic University of Uruguay - School of Business

Montevideo, URUGUAY

Catholic University of Uruguay's School of Business (<http://www.ucu.edu.uy/fce>) is pleased to announce the joint meeting of IAJBS (International Association of Jesuit Business Schools) and CJBE (Colleagues in Jesuit Business Education), bringing together Jesuit business schools from around the world to share, discuss and learn from one another.

The organizing universities are: Universidad Católica del Uruguay, UNISINOS (Brazil), Universidad Católica de Córdoba (Argentina), Universidad del Salvador (Argentina) y Universidad Alberto Hurtado (Chile). The forum will be an opportunity to share best practices in teaching, research and service, as well as to reflect on how each school can innovate and enhance its leadership to help build a more just and sustainable society.

Leadership and innovation are becoming key parts of business planning and development globally, contributing to a more sustainable world. This joint meeting will encourage discussion of the scholarship, pedagogy, and practice of leadership and innovation under the following general themes:

- Jesuit Leadership Style: a contribution to sustainable development
- Jesuit Inspiration at the University Level: innovation in business teaching pedagogy
- Jesuit Inspiration at the University Level: business challenges, university-enterprise relationship
- Reflections on a More Sustainable World: cases from different countries

This call for papers encourages the submission of papers that cover the above topics as well as contributions that connect to the World Forum theme with other topical areas. Authors of accepted papers will have the opportunity to submit their articles for review and publication in the Journal of Jesuit Business Education (JJBE) and the Journal of Management for Global Sustainability (JMGS). A brief overview of each Journal can be found at the end of this document.

About the Journal of Jesuit Business Education and the Journal of Management for Global Sustainability:

The Journal of Jesuit Business Education is the peer-reviewed, interdisciplinary journal of the Colleagues in Jesuit Business Education (CJBE). The journal is dedicated to the distribution of scholarly work and commentary with a focus on the distinctiveness of business education in the Jesuit tradition. Papers must be original work, not previously published and not under review elsewhere. Published manuscripts represent a wide range of interests from all business disciplines with a focus on Jesuit and Catholic identity, ethics and social responsibility, service learning, faith and spirituality, and social justice.

The Journal of Management for Global Sustainability was launched in 2011 as a scholarly outlet for publishing original research on ways public and private sector management practices can advance global sustainability. The JMGS is a peer-reviewed academic journal devoted to publishing original research and commentary on the field of management for global sustainability. Global sustainability is the broad set of interconnected issues that encompass, but are not limited to: achieving environmental preservation, social justice, poverty eradication, social entrepreneurship, desirable production and consumption patterns, species and resources preservation, and leading spiritually rich lives at this time in our history.

ADDENDUM

TOPIC 1	The Jesuit leadership style as a contribution to sustainable development.

The theme of leadership in organizations is a key aspect in the development of 21st Century economies and societies. Managers and others involved in organizations must be able to assess the social, political, economic, legal, multicultural and technological aspects in their organization and the mission they have on society.

When speaking of "the Jesuit leadership style" in particular, consider a transforming leader in businesses and organizations that will contribute to human development and a fairer society. This leadership is based on four pillars that Chris Lowney developed in his bibliography: knowledge of self, wit, love and heroism.

This is a style of leadership and a model that requires a paradigm shift which takes into account different intelligences (the "multiple intelligences" of Howard Gardner and the "emotional intelligence" by Daniel Goleman). More importantly, this leadership model puts the individual at the center: personal leadership first and then the leadership of others. It is through the "leadership of others" that leaders can achieve more competitive and sustainable organizations in an increasingly globalized and interconnected world.

Based on Chris Lowney, below are a few ideas:

- "We are all leaders and lead all the time."
- "Leadership comes from within and determines who I am and what I do."
- "Leadership is a life philosophy"
- "Becoming a leader is a continuous process of self-discovery and self-development."
- Confidence in one's leader is one of the basis of company productivity.
- Does job motivation depend on supervisors, directors and CEOs' leadership?
- Which is the influence of the leader in the work environment?
- Traditional leadership (with its different aspects or styles) vs. the Jesuit leadership style.

TOPIC 2

Innovation in the business teaching pedagogy at the University of Jesuit inspiration

The current reality of our volatile, uncertain, complex and ambiguous world affirms the need to innovate in the area of educational and professional development of business schools. We must respond to the demands of interest groups, both internal and external, and of those that arise from the evolution of society.

Innovation is characterized by a variety of forms, methods and scopes. It involves both changes in activities and attitudes, and requires the following elements: technology, innovative teaching-learning methodologies, development of new student capabilities, the updating of skills, and pedagogical and academic discipline.

Since infrastructure, technology and institutional policies are effective only when applied in the classroom and through innovative teaching methods, this underscores the importance of teachers in the process of change.

The main objective of this topic is to find innovative approaches to teaching in business schools aimed at Jesuit Universities: a) plans and curricula; b) the educational process; c) use of information and communication technologies; d) alternative learning modalities; e) government and management plans and programs.

You are invited to submit articles related to the overall theme or the following subtopics:

New Paradigms in Business Education:

The purpose of this sub-topic is to present new methods of teaching and learning and to recognize which elements are critical for quality learning.

Related ideas: diversity education, business in emerging economies, work-study family-balance, bibliographic support, infrastructure, new technologies in the classroom, inverted classrooms, etc.

The Value-Add of Classroom Education in a World of Virtual Education:

The purpose of this subtopic is to analyze the impact of each modality in the teaching-learning process and to recognize future trends.

Related Tags: advantages and disadvantages of distance education, instructional strategies based on IT, the future of classroom education, the impact on learning by both modalities, classroom education as "red ocean" in the future, etc.

Pedagogy for Comprehensive Training in Business Schools:

The purpose of this subtopic is to recognize and identify the necessary changes in the plans and academic programs of business schools in order to transform reality.

TOPIC 3	Challenges in the relationship enterprise-Jesuit university
----------------	--

Universities have been challenged to revise their role and connections in knowledge based societies. The traditional approach which gives Universities full responsibility for thought leadership and dissemination has been challenged in the new economy paradigm. Thought leadership and innovation are now frequently the outcome of multiple and complex connections wherein Universities are only one of the key players. In this perspective, the mission of thought leadership and dissemination acquires a new significance. Universities have been assuming an entrepreneurial attitude in order to establish connections within the complex array of stakeholders related to government, civil society, and companies, which all answer together for knowledge creation and dissemination.

In emerging economies, the entrepreneurial role of Universities is especially relevant due to the need of a collaborative attitude – universities, government, companies – towards new technologies and innovation to transform economic basis of cities, regions and countries.

In this panel, we propose a discussion of the entrepreneurial role Universities should take to sustain its historical role of being an agent of transformation.

TOPIC 4	Reflections for a more sustainable world: successful cases.

Internationally in general, and in emerging economies in particular, economics have had different impacts on social, political and environmental areas.

Economic growth in Latin America has slowed in the past year, but it has allowed progress in reducing extreme poverty, hunger and malnutrition, infant mortality and lack of access to water, among other social issues. The region has improved its economic and social sustainability, although there are significant challenges ahead. For example, the region has: low quality educational offerings, various educational challenges, discrimination against women in the labor market, and a lack of comprehensive protection policies to eliminate existing social vulnerabilities.

Other regions of the world have experience similar problems, but they show important progress in terms of economic growth.

In this framework, there are many cases of companies and organizations that are implementing, or agreements with universities, strategies and actions to support sustainable development in their communities and regions. Knowledge of these experiences, how they have been implemented, the motives behind them, etc. are considered to be significant for all the member universities and their academic IAJS the CJBE contributions.

You are invited to submit articles to analyze:

- Successful experiences of companies and organizations to improve the sustainability of a region or a particular production process.
- Ways to use sustainability cases in the development of programs and curricula of business schools.
- Reports of social, economic and environmental sustainability.
