Manmade Fibre Industry

Man-made fibres account for 68% of all fibres consumed worldwide. Their usage has been growing in clothing, carpets, household textiles and a wide range of technical products - tyres, conveyor belts, fillings for sleeping bags and cold-weather clothing, filters for improving the quality of air and water in the environment, fire-resistant materials, reinforcement in composites used for advanced aircraft production, and much else. Fibres can be precisely engineered to give the right combination of qualities required for the end-use in question: appearance, handle, strength, durability, stretch, stability, warmth, protection, easy care, breathability, moisture absorption and value for money, for example. In many cases, they are used in blends with natural fibres such as cotton and wool.

Available data shows that total mill consumption of man-made fibres worldwide grew by 4.1 per cent during 2013 over the previous year to reach 61 billion kg and in China by 8.5 per cent to reach 38 billion kg. South Asia as a whole also registered positive growth whereas consumption in India declined by 6.7 per cent and reached 2.1 billion kg during the year. Production of manmade fibres is also growing substantially in all major manufacturing countries except India. Obviously, it is not practicable to strategize the growth of manmade fibre based textiles industry based on our own fibre production unless a dramatic increase in domestic production takes place. Reducing the duty burden on MMFs and their raw materials will strengthen both production and consumption of MMFs.

About Conclave
